

university of applied sciences

THERE'S A WORLD TO EXPLORE

A graphic showing a map of South Africa in red, set against a yellow background. The text 'GRAND TOUR' is written in white, bold, uppercase letters across the top of the yellow background.

GRAND TOUR

Wildlife Management

Location: South Africa

Contact person: Jacques de Klerk

Belongs to: Stenden HMS, offered in South Africa

Period: MP1, MP2, MP3 & MP4

The minor is about

- Learning about conservation principles which could be implemented in each individuals' daily life.
- Developing social skills by living and working together with other students in a remote environment
- Obtaining a good understanding about the use of technology and social media in conservation and wildlife management

Student Testimonial

" What I know now and what I have learnt during this minor is so much more than I ever expected. I would advise anyone interested in Wildlife to begin this adventurous journey."

Kimberley Schippe

Examination

- Assessed on individual participation in the different educational activities
- Students will prepare individual and group assignments from lectures and workshops
- Mid-module exam of short questions and an end of module exam; open questions

#AWORLDTOEXPLORE

"A bad day in the bush, is better than any good day in the city!"

Wildlife management offers a truly life-changing experience...

The minor aims to develop your understanding and appreciations of the natural elements. You will learn about conservation of nature and natural resources and how to apply basic conservation principles to various (wildlife) operations.

In this minor you will study with students from many different programs who all have one thing in common: a passion for wildlife and conservation and a desire to learn how to incorporate conservation principles in their future career.

This minor consists of lectures, PBL, workshops and excursions that all focus on the Wildlife industry mainly in South Africa. It further investigates conservation practices from around the world.

